Bill Detwiler created blogger Jack Wallen's Must Have List and shows five, free Android apps. As of this writing, there are more than 200,000 apps on the Android market. You can also spend hours installing and removing apps, and you'll find some really useful apps. To help you search for handy Android apps, TechRepublic blogger Jack Wallen put together a list of 10 essential applications - some free, some paid. During this week's TR Dojo episode, I made a list of Jack's and covered five free apps: Dolphin ChompSMS Feedbot ConnectionBot Evernote: Jack and I listed the free app and feed. However, as of the April 9, 2011 update, FeedR is priced at $2.49 (U.S.). I apologize for the confusion we caused. Check out the full list of Jack's essential Android apps in our 10 different blogs. You can also sign up for the latest TR Dojo lessons with one or more of the best ways to get along with Android. With smartphones and tablets shaping how everyone interacts with the Internet, it's no surprise that a number of blog apps, as well as third-party clients, are available in the Android market. Some apps support video blogs, which is an immediate way to update your blog followers. Here is an overview of some apps that Android bloggers can play. Tumblr (free) supports video blogging Tumblr for Android, which basically gives you what Desktop Tumblr can do, except for the Tumblr request feature. It also supports multiple blogs. Quickpress and View are great for feedback, but it's seriously lacking media and viewing experience support. It's best to use a desktop site to upload content. The app can be posted with photos, labels and location information, as well as go from one blogger account to another. However, users report the application as a bug. A very basic application, LiveJournal for Android is the best composition, editing, publishing blog entries, asking questions, and suitable for uploading photos. It makes mobile blogging easy while supporting video blogging like Tumblr. It allows you to play with various media (except audio) and privacy controls. Before the official client of the video blog support came in, there was an alternative to buggy bloggers around. The multifaceted thing come with the ad. Download the ad-free version for a minimum fee. Moby (Free) supports video blogging mobile is by far the most extensive blogging app, with distribution on 25 sites, including the best social networks and blogging platforms. It is reported to be a bug, though, and likely requires some persistence. Like the paid version of video blogging support Moby, it captures videos, audios, photos and text and at the same time publishes them on various sites approved by users. With the rise of full-fledged browsers, do some bloggers prefer to use dolphins or other bloggers to complete their blogging on the go? These apps are the best, and which ones we missed? Your Android device can be captured amazingly Videos have access to a good Android video editor, but you can go the extra mile to make your videos look as good as possible. With the Android Video Editor app, you can make cuts to your videos, add background music, integrate text, apply filters, and create clips and much more. Here are 10 of the best things to consider checking out. Quik is, of course, a great application for video creators who want to do the job as quickly and conveniently as possible without skipping the quality. You can upload a combination of photos and videos, and the app can automatically create professional videos to do the rest. You can then crop clips, order them, add transitions, and apply effects to customize the video before exporting. Price: Free Premiere Clips was once an Adobe app that reigned in video editing, but Premier Rush quickly seems to have taken its place. With apps for both desktop and mobile, you can access everything you do from anywhere within your app that's designed to be available through the cloud. With this all-in-one video editor, you can take advantage of a variety of powerful tools to make your videos look the way you want them to. Price: Limit your free starter plan with a free Adobe Creative Cloud membership and the option to purchase a single app for $10 a month. Adobe Premier Rush is also included in Premier Pro. With over 3.5 million downloads and an editor's choice on Google Play, InShot's Video Editor app is a reputation-worthy app. This powerful video editor app guides you through the easy process of creating and editing videos, and offers a variety of editing options, including video mergers and joins that make it easy to combine multiple clips. Additional editing features can optimize videos for specific social platforms such as Instagram, YouTube, Tik Tok, etc. Price: Premium version $2.99 free. Like InShot's video editor app, VivaVideo is another impressive (and popular) app designed to create short videos and upload them to social networks. It doesn't exactly offer the best and most extensive editing capabilities, but it's incredibly user-friendly and fun to use. Trim and merge clips, apply filters, apply text, and take advantage of visually appealing stickers and graphics. Price: Free in-app purchases ranging from $1.29 to $40.99. Another editor's choice on Google Play, PowerDirector is the kind of video editing app you want for Android if you're not afraid to take the time to learn how the app works, looking to do some serious editing. Once you get used to it, you'll be able to create some of the most professional looking videos with all sorts of amazing effects. Price: Free in-app purchases ranging from $1.19 to $46.99. Kinemaster is still a full-featured video editing app that has a solid reputation for having a user-friendly interface and an amazing array of editing features for free applications (also editor's choice on Google Play). Like PowerDirector, it comes with a chroma key for background editing and can export video in 4K resolution. Price: Free in-app purchases ranging from $1.04 to $44.36. YouCut is one of the few good video editor apps that can export videos for free without automatically applying watermarks. From the creators of the popular InShot video editor app, YouCut is designed to make videos quick and easy to upload to popular social networks like Instagram, YouTube, Tik Tok, and more. Merge/join clips, adjust them in fast or slow motion, create photo slideshows and use them to add music. Price: Free in-app purchases ranging from $3.79 to $12.99. FilmoreGo is another popular video editor app that thankfully won't put a watermark on video export, but that's not all. This app offers all the basic features like trimming, applying filters and adding a vast collection of plus effects to a wide range of professional editing tools. It's perfect for making videos on social networks like Instagram, Facebook and others. Price: Free in-app purchases from $1.39 to $10.99. Like Quik, Magisto uses artificial intelligence to analyze video and choose the parts that work best for you. If you want fast results and aren't too close to manually fidgeting with too many video editing options, Magisto is worth a try. Choose an editing style, choose the videos and photos you want to include, and choose an optional music track from Magisto's built-in music library or device. The app will do the rest. Price: Free in-app purchases ranging from $0.99 to $239.99. ActionDirector is another editor's choice on Google Play, which is a video editor app designed specifically for editing action clips. It provides features such as slow motion, fast motion, replays, and rewind to highlight the best action shots. Other features include basic features such as adjustable color options, trimmers, filters, transitions, text, and more. Price: Free in-app purchases ranging from $2.49 to $31.99. Thank you for letting us know! Tell us why! There is no way to mention both the to-do list manager and the utility available on Android. This means that after testing several apps and companion services, we settled on Wunderlist as the best to-do manager for Android, but it's a very fierce competition. Wunderlist platform: Free download PageFeaturesCross-platform, with apps for iOS, Android, Windows, Mac OS, and Linux only, so you can access web apps when you're on a system where wunderlist applications are not installed. You need an intermediary service Feature You can quickly add and manage tasks in a mobile app so that you can open the Home Screen widget and view it soon without opening the app. You can assign due dates and due dates, send tasks to Wunderlist via email, and support email notifications when a task is due and you can configure and stand out by displaying tasks, add notes to help jog your memory, or provide multiple backgrounds to personalize your mobile experience by sorting them into lists or categories; where it is excelWunderlist's greatest strength in flexibility. The Android app features itself greatly and abundantly, and gives you access to all the features you want in the admin to be mobile. You can easily add tasks, move between categories, or use stars to mark them as important, change due dates, and change views so that you can focus specifically on the most important items you need to work on. In addition, all actions and changes are synced to your Wunderlist account on the web, eliminating the need to sync or push your changes to other devices. You can also share what you want to do with others and collaborate on projects. Besides, it doesn't hurt that Wunderlist is available on almost any platform, native apps for iOS, Windows, Mac OS, and fully featured web apps with Android as well as Linux. It's a short Wunderlist Android app that falls relatively new, so some users report problems getting home screen widgets that work right away, or work sorting tasks. All of this works well in our tests, but they're worth noting. Wunderlist also allows you to display tasks and take notes for more references, but there is no tagging support. Besides, Wunderlist has no location awareness at all. It's a disadvantage when you consider some of its competition, but wunderlist is completely free and it's a big disadvantage when considering its competitors who have location-aware rates for it. G/O media can receive cursor updates: As many of you remind us, Wunderlist does not support recurring tasks. Astrid (Free) was very close to taking first place. We've previously stated Astrid many times, especially in our Lifehacker pack for Android, and we still think it's a good app. It was free, one of the first feature-rich to-do list managers for Android, unlike Wunderlist, Google Tasks and Producteev as well as syncing with their web apps, partly to make up for desktop clients' insufficiency. If you're already using another web service and want an app that syncs with your Android phone, Asgrid is a great alternative. If you're willing to put the money down, Asgrid will set you back $1.49 for a plugin for location recognition, and a power pack for about $3.99 including features like home screen widgets and voice support. The task force (free) An option that looks great and has a lot of great features that other apps have baked into paid versions such as home screen widgets, alerts, voice actions, and Google Task Sync, or free versions that are included in in-app purchases. The only downside of Taskos is that there are no web or desktop apps to use when you are on your computer. In addition, the discussion of to-do managers will not be complete without mentioning ToDo.txt and Todo.txt Touch ($2), written by our own founding editor, Gina Trapani. To use todo.txt Touch, your to-do list must be a text file stored in your Dropbox account. When combined with the Todo.txt command-line interface (CLI) for Windows, there's an elegant but powerful way to manage what to do on the go or on your computer. Another utility, Letters (Free), works in a similar way. Most other to-do managers for Android are paid add-ons free or in the freemium department. ReCall (free), has a great Android app that syncs with ReCall's web app, but sync is often buggy and the best features, such as integration with Evernote and Google Calendar, SMS notifications, location recognition are only available to ReCall Pro subscribers for $19.99/year. GTasks (free) is a great and easy-to-use admin for people who use Google tasks. It's supported ads, and it would cost you $6.99 to get rid of them. The task list (free) for Android is another great option featuring widgets and color and category organization. It's also ad-supported. $1.99 Remove them. Finally, remember milk (free) is another option, the service is updated this week to make the Android app free to all users, as well as those who wish to pay $25 a year for a Pro account. You'll have to pay to unlock the true potential of your app. This is not a thorough list of to-do apps for Android to say the least. There are dozens of apps in the Android app market, some of which are used as standalone organizational tools and others that are third-party drawings for popular web services. Is there something we liked that we missed? Let us know in the comments below. Lifehacker's app directory is a new and growing directory of recommendations for the best applications and tools in several categories. Category.
